HINCKLEY & EGERY IRON CO'Y.

Bangor, July 28, 1875.

To the Honorable Judge of Probate for the County of Penobscot:

The undersigned, administrator of the estate of Timothy O. Rogers, late of Lagrange, in said county, deceased, respectfully represents that said deceased, at the time of his decease, was seized and possessed of a dwelling house and other buildings situated in said Lagrange, and of about three hundred dollars.

Wherefore your petitioner prays your Honor to grant him a license to sell at public or private sale, and part of the real estate of the deceased, including the reversion of the widow's dower therein, to satisfy said debts, expenses of sale, and charges of administration.

District Court of the United States,

District of Maine.

In the matter of JOHN OSBORN, Bankrupt, in BANKRUPTCY.

This is to give notice that a Petition has been presented to the Court, this 3rd day of April, 1875, by John Osborn, of Bangor, said District, praying that he may be decreed to have a full discharge from all his debts, provable under the Bankrupt Act, and according to the Petition, and it appearing that the former order of notice thereon has not been published, now on this 9th day of July, A. D. 1875

It is ordered by the Court that a hearing be had upon the same, on the first Monday of Sept. A. D. 1875, before the Court in Portland, at 10 o'clock A. M., and that notice thereof be published in the Bangor Daily Whig and Courier and the Piscataquis Observer, newspapers printed in said District, once a week, for three successive weeks, and that all other publications that may be ordered by the Court, be also published in said newspapers, and that all creditors who have proved their debts and other persons in interest, may appear at said time, and place, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

Androscoggin.

The students of the engineering class of Bowdoin College have completed the survey of the Androscoggin Railroad and have made the plans and profiles. It presents several curious engineering features.

Cumberland.

The Press says that Saturday night, as the Pullman excursion from Boston was backing into the depot in Portland, Thomas Coffin of Brunswick jumped from the train and hardly escaped with his life In some way he was caught by the wheels in jumping, and both legs were badly cut and one ankle fractured

The Argus says that Fred H. Smith has been arrested for stealing from Charles McLaughlin & Co. of Portland by whom he was employed as a truckman.

Winthrop Savings Bank. The Journal says that Hon W W Bolster, bank examiner of the State, has just completed a careful examination of the affairs of the Winthrop savings bank whose safe was recently robbed He finds the affairs of the bank in better condition than was at first supposed, which will be gratifying to the depositors It is understood that the liabilities of the bank are $114,000 and the available assets $52,000 This will give depositors 45 per cent of their deposits The stolen town bonds which were deposited in the bank were all registered, and therefore the town will meet with no loss on that account A full and official statement will soon be made by the trustees of the bank.

LONDON BRIDGE.

As the boat shoots under the arches and up the river, the bridge comes into view—the busiest place in all busy London. About eight thousand people on foot and nine hundred vehicles pass over it every hour in the day. The rumble of the traffic as it comes to us on the boat is like the roll of distant thunder I can compare it to nothing else, trite as the simile is In the background you can see the tower, in which offenders of the Government were imprisoned in the barbarous times of old and Billingsgate, the largest fish-market in the world. The dealers and their customers are notorious for the use of bad language, and the word "Billingsgate" is commonly accepted in writing and conversation as meaning abuse or profanity

The bridge has been rebuilt several times, and this present one cost ten millions of dollars in gold; so you may imagine how substantial it is. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth there were stores on each side, with arbors and gardens, and at the south end there was a queer wooden house brought from Holland, which was covered with carving and gilding. In the middle ages it was the scene of affrays of all kinds and it was burned down several times three thousand persons perishing in one fire alone. The heads of rebels were stuck on the gate-house, among others those of Jack Cade, and of Garnet, who was concerned in the gunpowder plot to blow up the Houses of Parliament. The heads of good Sir Thomas More, brave Wallace of Scotland and the pious Bishop of Rochester were also placed there and until a comparatively recent date such ghastly trophies glared down on the passers-by. They were fastened on iron spikes and as a gale of wind they sometimes fell to the ground or into the water

Three hundred and fifteen years ago the Lord Mayor of London was William Hewet Hewet lived just now on the bridge, and had an infant daughter named Anne Her mother of the Queen was then very strong, as the saying is, and several feet taller than the arches One day a nurse was playing with baby Anne at a window overlooking the river, and in a careless moment she let the little charge fall A young apprentice named Osborne plunged into the boiling stream and boldly and with great difficulty saved her thus earning the Hewet's gratitude of the mayor, the Lord Mayor. Anne grew to be a beautiful woman, and as her father was very wealthy many noblemen including earls and baronets sought her hand But she loved Osborne the best and to all other suitors her father said "No Osborne won't be and Osborne shall have her" He did, and he afterward became the first Duke of Leeds From A Visit to Old Halls, Mr. Nichols for Sept

A Verdict in Accordance with Proofs

The verdict of the jury in the case of Hood's Sarsaparilla vs. Bull is different from some that have been rendered, in being in accordance with the overwhelming evidence in support of the claims of America's most popular blood remedy. It may well be thanked that there are not more medicines substituted for it, when so many in such a variety of forms may have been palmed off. As a common sense of the community establishes a fact of the highest importance to the sick and debilitated, we will state those who are suffering from the want of tonic, alterative, blood purifying medicine, to use Hood's Sarsaparilla, and be cured. There are in one of the most important functions of the body, and if kept free and active by the use of reliable remedies, will keep them healthy. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best blood purifier known. dew aug25

Read the testimonials of some of those who have been cured. During the time I was employed by Dr. Harrison in 1866 and 1867 I had charge of Mrs. Osborne's case. I can say that the statements made by A. B. Robinson in regard to her case are correct. I have also seen the cures of Mrs. Hilton, Mrs. Hodgkins, and others mentioned by Mr. Robinson, and can say that the statements made by him are correct.

WILLIAM MARSH, late with Dr. Harrison

I had a large cancer on my lip, which was successfully removed by A. B. Robinson in 1874. I have had no return of the disease, and I believe it is entirely cured.

LIGHTING THE WATCH FIRES.

We had occasion to name the Democratic candidate for Governor, shortly after that war like speech about lighting the watch fires, providing sixty days rations, and uniting in united ranks, &c., to say that the Republican skirmish line had not yet deployed but that before the campaign closed it would find things quite lively enough to meet the most ardent expectations. The gentleman who is carrying Hillsburn's and Emery's flag in this contest will find full enough work for his knowledge of the tactics which prevailed in the Penobscot campaign for the Republican standard bearer graduated under Grant in the Wilderness and under his lead we propose from this time forward to move directly upon the enemy's works.

During the next three weeks the hills and valleys of glorious Old Maine will echo with the Music of the Union to which she has always kept time, and before the sunset of the 14th of September the men who for fourteen years have sought to loster the flag from its loyal height, will learn that the people are true as steel to the principles for which they have encountered the storm of rebellion and the perils of the battle field.

The campaign will be opened this evening at Portland by the gallant General Chamberlain in person assisted by the famous War Governor of that and the adjacent Commonwealth Governor Woodbury of New York will address the people of Maine from every point of the compass during the next three weeks. Nothing for the performance of a work like this. Thursday evening General Grant and Senator Morton will address the citizens of Bangor and the county from the platform of Norombega Hall, whence many inspiring messages have gone out with assurance of the steadfastness of the Penobscot Valley, and we have no doubt a union massing our Republican forces that they will be proud of the heroic soldier the accomplished gentleman and the broad minded clear-headed citizen whom they are to make the next Governor of Maine.

We add that General Connor is certain to find in the people of the state to meet them and cope with them in a manly way. His record is familiar, but the public would like to see and judge from personal intercourse of the qualities of the man who are to place in the highest office in their gift. The private character and personal bearing of our candidate will bear inspection quite as favorably as his record as a patriot, and while the conductors of Copperhead organs during the war may think it safe to caricature the injuries of a wounded soldier, the people of Maine will look upon Selden Connor's scratches as the badges of higher honor than any other which his country could bestow.

General Roberts was anxious that the watch fires should be lighted "and he will shortly find them blazing upon every hill top but kindled by the same hands and defended by the same stout hearts which followed and supported the cause of the country, not only until the dark hours of 1862, but through darkness and sunshine, encouragement and disaster, until the final and grand triumph was achieved. And the willing hands and hearts of the same people, will keep those "watch-fires" burning brightly throughout the length and breadth of Maine until they have assured rebel-sympathizers at home and repudiationists at large that they can have no aid or comfort from the Dirigo State.

The New York Herald does not take much stock in the Georgia telegrams, but advises the Southern Democrat, when he hears about a negro insurrection, to put his tongue in his cheek, and leave his shot gun on the rack where it belongs.

"THE BLIGHTS VAN WHALEN."

From the Kennebec Journal

Every now and then the Democratic papers in Maine—and in other States copying from those papers in Maine—bring against Speaker Blaine the charge that he entered Congress "a poor man" in 1863 and is now a millionaire. As to his being a millionaire, it is to be presumed the assertion is merely one of those extravagant statements which belong to the literature of highly-spiced partisan journals. But as to his having a "poor man" in 1863, Seven One familiar with the coal trade and the value of coal properties in one immediate vicinage on the Monongahela river, knows the assertion to be completely at variance with the fact. Long before 1863 indeed, as far back as the Democratic administration of President Buchanan, it was well known that Mr. Blaine owned one of the finest coal properties on the Monongahela when he returned a much larger income from a Congressional salary, many years before he ever was a candidate for Congress. This fact the Alleghany County Registry of Deeds established in the most indisputable manner, and we refer to it simply to show how wild and reckless certain papers have grown to be in their charges against conspicuous and influential Republicans.

It should be stated, moreover, that the business reputation of Mr. Blaine is known in circles, where he is well known here, stands very high. Those who are familiar with his attention to details, his industry, his energy, his enterprise, and his integrity, find no cause for wonder in the fact that he has become not a millionaire, but a man of independent fortune, deserved profits in the development and advance of his property ultimately to attain to the possession of large wealth.

THE SECTARIAN ISSUE IN POLITICS

[From the N. Y. Times.]

Let politic and dodge the issue as they may, the sectarian question will obtrude itself into contemporary politics. It is troubling the Governments of the half of Europe to-day, and it will come up in spite of all efforts to keep it in the background as a vital point in the election contests of the United States. Whatever we may think of the methods which the civil authorities in Germany and in Switzerland are employing against the Roman Catholic party, there can be no question that even their extreme measures were provoked by a radical change in the attitude of the Church toward the State. Every European, and for that matter, every American, community in which the teaching of the Roman creed is supported by public grants has found occasion to readjust its relations with the church, simply because the church has taken occasion to raise to the rank of dogmatic truths certain theories of its rights which are incompatible with the claims of its civil law to the unqualified obedience of all citizens.

It would be absurd to suppose that in places where the Roman church is simply regarded as a voluntary religious association there should be no occasion to guard against the aggressive policy which is being pursued by the dominant party to that hurch over the rest of the world. In countries where the supporters of the church are in the majority they prescribe liberty of conscience. In countries where they are in the minority, they rest upon the principles of religious freedom their right to be exempted from paying for the support of institutions which they dislike. The same ecclesiastical party, which would, if it could, crush out every vestige of religious toleration in Spain, talks as lightly in Ohio of New York about liberty of opinion as the most advanced exponents of the ideas of Roger Williams and William Penn. The Church of Rome was never more fastidious about its methods, but it has always had a single eye to the accomplishment of certain well-defined aims. Its thoroughly drilled and perfectly disciplined host of lay and clerical retainers are never left in doubt as to what are the orders from headquarters. The utmost latitude is allowed as to the means of carrying them out, but no faltering is tolerated in regard to the objects to be achieved.

In Prussia the Church is engaged in a desperate struggle to retain the power of spending public money without being subject to State control, and in the United States it is preparing to provoke a precisely similar conflict. There is, to be sure, this radical difference between the two contests, that Prussia is withdrawing from the Church immunities which it found dangerous to continue, while in the leading States of the Union the Church is working more or less openly to obtain the concession of privileges which it has never yet enjoyed. In Ohio and New York the struggle is made with the schools, and people who doubt the exoteric unity of Catholic policy might study with advantage the struggle which is going on in the Province of New Brunswick on precisely the same grounds. As a Church organ puts it, "Catholics are taxed as their neighbors are for schools that their religion forbids them to use. It is a wrong and a grievance." Just as soon as the Romish hierarchy finds itself strong enough to assume a dictatorial tone inregard to the administration of the affairs of any State, so soon will the fight of Catholics either to divert a portion of the school funds to their exclusive use, or to be exempt from the supervision altogether become a question not political parties. It may suit their purpose to characterize as "disingenuous" any attempt to agitate the question now, but it is being insidiously pressed, all the same, wherever the opportunity arises. Everybody knows that the Democratic Convention of Ohio went as far as it dared to satisfy the Catholic priesthood on this school question, and that it counts on a solid Catholic vote in return for its subserviency, and as a bid for more extensive concessions in the future.

If the crusade again at the school-system is less openly prosecuted in New York, it is simply because the time is hardly ripe for it. We had a duplicate of the Ohio bill chaplain's bill last winter at Albany, and two or three very ad-vit feelers were thrown out to ascertain how far it would be possible to go in underwining the school-system without arousing public sentiment. The result of these efforts at least went to prove that every Democratic legislator subject to Tammany Hall could be reckoned on as a thick-and-thin supporter of any measures which the Church might demand. The alliance between the leaders of the Tammany organization and the Catholic priesthood has never been more intimate than it is at the present time, and whether openly or not, the question of concessions to Catholic opinion will unquestionably enter into the coming campaign. The jealous care with which the mass of the American people guard the integrity of their public-school system is perfectly well known to its chief assailants. They have learned by past experience the dangers of boldly seeking its overthrow, but they will none the less seek to compass the same end by insidious means. And it is hardly necessary to remark that a wary and secret foe is more to be feared than a frank and open enemy.

PUBLIC DEBT IN MASSACHUSETTS

BOSTON, August 19, 1875

To the Editor of the Whig and Courier

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, as is well known, has run riot in the matter of rolling up municipal debts, the aggregate now exceeding eighty millions. This was to have been expected, as no State is so much under the influence of bankers and money-lenders, who are everywhere in favor of creating and perpetuating public debts. Seven One familiar with the coal trade and the value of coal properties in one immediate vicinage on the Monongahela river, knows the assertion to be completely at variance with the fact. Long before 1863 indeed, as far back as the Democratic administration of President Buchanan, it was well known that Mr. Blaine owned one of the finest coal properties on the Monongahela when he returned a much larger income from a Congressional salary, many years before he ever was a candidate for Congress. This fact the Alleghany County Registry of Deeds established in the most indisputable manner, and we refer to it simply to show how wild and reckless certain papers have grown to be in their charges against conspicuous and influential Republicans.

BOSTON, August 19, 1875

To the Editor of the Whig and Courier

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, as is well known, has run riot in the matter of rolling up municipal debts, the aggregate now exceeding eighty millions. This was to have been expected, as no State is so much under the influence of bankers and money-lenders, who are everywhere in favor of creating and perpetuating public debts. Seven millions of valuation, have been purchased on the streets at ninety-five cents on the dollar. It is one of the very richest municipalities in the world, and with no possible excuse for owing anything. These shameful spectacles will no longer be possible in Massachusetts, and municipal credits, within the permitted limits, will become valuable and remain so. Five per cent. per month will be the maximum interest which the cities and large towns in this Commonwealth will be obliged to pay, if this act of May 14 is kept on the statute book. If there had been such an act in Maine, we should not have seen a debt of $150,000 kept up in Bangor for more than twenty years prior to the civil war, without the slightest effort to reduce it.

GEO. M. WESTON

AN UNBELIEVABLE RECORD.

[From the Boston Advertiser]

The Maine Republicans are after Mr. Madigan, the Democratic candidate for the vacancy in Congress from the Fourth District, with a very sharp stick. Having utterly destroyed his pretensions as a reformer by quoting from official records the evidence of his being the prime mover and personal actor in an election fraud and wholesale bribery of voters, they are quoting two resolutions from the platform on which Mr. Madigan stood when he was last a candidate for Congress in 1864. The Bangor Democrat at the same time assisted its readers that Mr. Madigan was "an original peace man, from the beginning denouncing this war as the greatest crime since Calvary." The resolutions were as follows:

Resolved, That the Democracy of this district denounce the heresy of a constitutional prosecution of an unconstitutional war; that we both deny the right and the possibility of the coercion of sovereign States; that we maintain that the system of government under which we live is based upon the idea of the self-government of the States.

Resolved, That believing as we do that a further prosecution of the present war will result in the ruin of the country and the permanent separation of the States, opposing it, we declare ourselves in favor of an immediate armistice and negotiations for peace.

"There is the best of reason why the Argus should abuse Senator Morton. In 1861, Indiana elected a Democratic and consequently a rebel Legislature, just such a one as the Argus would have indorsed at that time. That Legislature not only refused to make provision for the raising of new regiments and filling up of those in the field, but even to appropriate money to pay the interest on the State debt. Mr. Morton was at that time Governor. He went to New York and, on his own responsibility obtained a half million dollars to pay the interest on the debt and enable Indiana to respond to the calls of President Lincoln with an alacrity which was remarkable. He saved the credit of the State and thwarted the designs of a rebel-Democratic Legislature to aid the cause of treason. That's reason enough for the abuse of the Argus.—Portland Press.

The author of that brilliant article in the Commercial, finding himself made very ridiculous by his attempt to claim credit for the Democratic party on account of the Water Works, seeks to cover his confusion by talking about what he assumes to be the private opinions of the editor of this paper as to the best method of accomplishing the desired result. Such personal views, except in so far as they find expression in the columns of this paper, are not subject to the criticisms of an anonymous writer, although, if he be a reputable person and will call upon us, we shall be very ready to give him the benefit thereof. The full admission, however of the correctness of our statement as to the origin and promotion of the enterprise is all that interests the public. The attempt to make the Water Works a Democratic party machine was as silly as it was disgraceful.

If the Presque Isle North Star would have any of its intelligent readers believe in the sincerity of its support of Gen. Plaisted, it will have to adopt a very different course from that pursued in its last issue. That paper professed the earnest desire for the nomination of Gen. Plaisted, and now that its wishes have been realized, it manifests a strange spirit in seeking to impair the support of the candidate by fostering dissension and inflaming personal feuds. We tell the conductors of that paper plainly that the public will find much more to command their respect in the prompt and hearty manner in which Mr Powers has volunteered to labor for Republican success, than in the spitefulness of a journal which would give comfort to the enemy rather than stop quarrelling.

SYMPTOMS.

BY JOHN G SAXE

If, when you hear a certain lady's name,
You feel your pulses grow a trifle quick,
Or hastily assign reasons of shame
Had stirred, just then, the currents of your heart,
And if that name—or pit it rather strong—
In raptures seems, very much above
All other maidens—I think I can't be wrong
To venture the opinion, you're in love.

If when it flies, by some capricious chance,
You meet the lady in a hall or play,
You shrink abashed before her modest glance,
And quite forget the words you meant to say,
And if, moreover, gazing at her hand,
You wish—and that the hand you were a glove,
It isn't very hard to understand
That you're "Romeo and Juliet" you're in love!

If with two ladies, on a summer's day,
You saunter slowly at luncheon or at tea,
And think, if one of these were but away
(A wish, or sin, how happy you would be,
If that the wine in such a giddy whirl
You scarcely speak to her you're thinking of,
Lest prattle guilty with the other girl—
There's reason for supposing you're in love!

If all at once, your amatory pen
(Which ne'er before attempted less than sense,
Forgets mono—beau of gems and men
To pour out verse and mariage in lines
Wherein you deftly rhyme of "youth" and "truth"
And call your subject "darling," "duck," or "dove"
Or sadly how some cruel lady hath—
The sense, it is to unlearn—you're in love!

If of her sex oh other you can ear find
One half so bright or lovable to be,
To her aside as you are wholly blind
The Dutch—I mean, that other people see),
If now you're was a Grecian dove
And never dealt the angel hands above
So silent when she sings—you may suppose
Her and the slightest question you're in love!

A STORY OF CRESBORNE CHASE.

[From "All the Year Round."

Almost in the centre of Cranborne Chase, once part of the New Forest, and which, as late as 1828, contained some twelve thousand deer, looked after by six rangers under orders of Lord Waters, there stands, seven miles from Cranborne, a small public house called the Red-headed Stag, with half a dozen cottages and shepherds' houses to keep it company.

The Chase, which once embraced half Dorset, Hampshire, and Wiltshire, is full of hills, which towards Dorsetshire turn to bare downs, with here and there a clump of beech trees, or a knoll, a sunken line that marks it an ancient British pathway, or an old Roman road leading towards the coast.

Upon one of these low grassy knolls which are full of Wiltshire downs, and round a shoal of the rolling downs where three lines of grass ramp at almost right angles to each other, stood a flock of young sheep, the same should and hurdles at the heels. He was a tall, wiry young fellow of seven-and-twenty, his face shrewd and decided, his eye keen and bright. His dress was a velveteen shooting jacket with a rabbit on the right shoulder and he wore on his grey head a little bright green cap from which rose a tuft of hair that would have made a Highlander proud. His flesh had that peculiar lustre—a sort of purple—which tells of health and his cheeks looked round with the sort of contrast that sun-kissed nature sets off against the wool and sky.

The slightest thing seemed to catch his eye, a tuft of oak feathers which a black bird had been picking, a few scattered bridges' bones, a rush mole hill, and the print of deer's feet—and he appeared to take the observation of each and note it for future use.

Suddenly he stopped within a few yards of a tall oak, which stood on a mound which a wild tree had formed for him, to scrape out his back's home-rest that quietly behind while looking at the next livestock of its ears for a rabbit sitting at the mouth of its burrow, or a squirrel gambolling on the branches, and pulled up as soon when he saw him.

"Young Gregg" as the keepers were all wont to call French Hugh within the hearing of his right hand.

Down a straight path between two rows of yew trees came a gentleman—and the ranger perceived at the same time striking one of his gathered legs with his crop.

Only when we know an master could courage enough even in address of the ranger. I know very much, I must have that you are a stranger to me."

The gentleman not wear time away in asking for that no friend required the stranger should.

"I am Lord Bolton's son Lord George, and I'm out shooting to-day. I have lost my dog, and I've lost my way, and I've lost my temper, and I've lost my breakfast, and I've lost my luncheon, and I've lost my patience, and I've lost my way, and I've lost my temper, and I've lost my dog, and I've lost my way, and I've lost my temper, and I've lost my dog, and I've lost my way, and I've lost my temper, and I've lost my dog
